THEORY #3: THE SOCIAL PENETRATION THEORY

WHY KNOWING THE UNKNOWN?

In the social-penetration theory, there states that as communication develops, so thus the level of intimacy to the persons.

This means that as we try to get to know someone, we tend to get drawn to them and establish boundaries and connections in which we can benefit from and by communication.

REFLECTION

The third relational communication theory, the social-penetration theory, states that as connections develop, interpersonal communication moves from moderately shallow, non-intimate levels to more profound, more intimate ones. This is also one of the reasons why we get to know people well depending on our relationship with them. Through social-penetration theory, we are able to distinguish our relationship with others in accordance with the stages of relational development.
